1. Housing requests that tenants report landlord notifications

Let's start with housing. The National Housing Institute has called on tenants to notify the Administration of the notifications they receive from owners in the framework of the disintervention of rents. Whether it is considering terminating the contract or announcing new conditions or the recovery of the flat for its own use, the institution wants to have documentation to detect possible breaches and follow them up. According to the statements of the Institute's management collected this Saturday, the indicated route is a generic request addressed to the ministry responsible for housing. It should be emphasized that a communication from the owner does not, by itself, demonstrate any abuse. But it is also true that, without a record of incidents, the guarantees of the law can remain only on paper. The question is how many notifications will be received, how many will be investigated and how many will result in effective action.

2. CASS and Salut work to expand oncology coverage to 100%

Let's move on to health. The Andorran Social Security Fund and the Ministry of Health are working to extend the coverage of medical procedures related to cancer to one hundred percent. The current distinction is important: hospitalization may be fully covered, while many outpatient tests and treatments continue to be ninety percent covered, often requiring the patient to pay up front. The ASSANDCA association says it knows at least a dozen people who are having difficulty meeting these expenses. The Director of Benefits of the CASS has explained that work is being done to change the regulatory framework and move towards the third payer. Not yet universal coverage approved. When it comes to serious illness, the difference between an advertised entitlement and an applicable entitlement can be a bill a family can't pay.

3. Banders capture 1,300 Asian wasp queens and treat 37 nests

And let's end with the environment. The flags have reported that during this year's campaign, one hundred and forty traps have been installed against the Asian wasp, 1,300 queens have been captured and thirty-seven nests have been located and treated. This species is listed in Andorra as invasive and can harm bees, other pollinators and beekeeping. The work is done with the communes and the beekeepers. The figures show control activity, but they do not prove by themselves that the expansion has stopped. Officials plan to evaluate the results in January. If a nest is detected, the most prudent thing to do is to notify the competent services and not handle it.
